Police Using New System

Beginning Sunday, Aug. 5th, the State Police have been issuing a new type of warning card to drivers who violate the motor vehicle laws so as to require a reprimand but in a lesser degree than that would warrant court action.

In the past the warning cards passed to motorists have been maintained in a separate file and upon the third warning the name of the violator has been listed on the State Police bulletin so that officers would, upon apprehending him for another offense, issue a court summons instead of further warnings which evidently had no effect.

This system's greatest weakness laid in the fact that it relied too heavily upon the officers' memories of what they had read in bulletins weeks and even months previously. Again it often resulted in a great deal of checking by both radio and telephone.

The new warning card system is patterned along the lines of those adopted by several other states. This card, when returned by the trooper, will be forwarded to the Court Records Division of the Secretary of State where it will be made a part of a driver's permanent record.

If this office, when filing one of the new warning cards, notices sufficient prior citations, whether for arrests or previous warnings, it will take all the cards out of the file for the attention of the Secretary of State.

If, upon examination, it is found that the driver concerned comes under one of the following categories, he will be notified to appear before the Secretary of State to show cause why his license to operate should not be suspended:

1. Three warnings in a year with no convictions will be cause for a hearing.
2. Two warnings while operating on a conditional license will result in a hearing.
3. Two convictions for minor violations plus one warning within a two-year period will be grounds for a hearing.
4. As hearings are always held where there is a conviction for a major violation, if the record shows one or more previous warnings, the license will be suspended more quickly than if there are no warnings in our file.

COUNTY POULTRYMEN URGED TO ATTEND POULTRY SCHOOL

Poultrymen from Oxford County are urged to attend the Annual Poultry School at the University of Maine, by their County Agent, Foster Johnston. The school will be held on August 21 and 22 this year. All meetings will be held in the Louis "Pete" Room in the new library.

This promises to be one of the best poultry conferences of the year" points out Gordon. "There are some fine speakers on the program and this is a chance for Oxford County poultrymen to pick up some new wrinkles that are very important to the poultry farmer."

Rooms and meals are available right on the campus at a very economical rate.

Reservation cards are available at the Extension Office in South Paris.

The Week in Oxford County

Perley S. Braden, 70, of East Bethel died of a broken neck last Saturday evening when he fell from a load of hay on the Frank Edwards farm. Braden's son, Raymond, was working with him. Over 400 employees at the Oxford Paper Co. mill at Rumford are receiving training in a safety course. The course stresses the importance of safeguarding employees and to reduce the number of accidents.

Joe Joseph C. Merritt, 18, son of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Merritt of Mexico was killed in an automobile accident last Thursday at New Providence, Tenn., according to the word received by his parents. He was stationed at Fort Campbell, Ky. He enlisted July 28, 1950.

The newly installed parking meters at Norway yielded $1,044.05 for the first five weeks reported last Friday.

There was a five car collision Sunday night near the Norway-Oxford town line. Only one person, Mrs. Selma Hodges of South Paris, was injured, suffering minor cuts. The accident occurred while State Trooper Stephen Conant was stop-

"I REMEMBER" BY THE OLD TIMERS

From Mrs. Arthur Reah, Graniteville, Md.: I remember when the women always pinned up their skirts when doing outdoor chores. The skirt was caught at both sides at bottom and brought up around the waist, and then the center in back was brought up and all was pinned together in back. Usually, an apron was worn over this.

From Mrs. C. A. Wheeler, Hannibal, Mo.: The "Gordon C. Green" is the only passenger steamer now making a few trips north from St. Louis. I remember when the old "Diamond Joe" line had four or five river boats making regular trips with passengers and freight. We went to the St. Louis World's Fair on one of them in 1904. I remember when the river was dotted with rowboats from which men dived for muscle shells which were used to make buttons in the button factory.

From E. E. Meredith, Fairmont, W. Va.: I remember when a cow was milked at the Main Street, where you saw a stethoscope bright with variegated old underwear, stockings, etc., you knew that they were dyeing carpet rugs.

From Mrs. Ida Treat, Wilsonville, Neb.: We had a old house as a barn and before winter father built a old cattle shed with poles over the top covered with plaster hay.

From Mary and Peter Miller, Crowley, Colo.: We lived in Denver in 1879. We had Indians for neighbors. When mother made blouses, she always gave them some. They used to come and ask for more blouses, and we had lots of fun with them.

From E. E. Meredith, Fairmont, W. Va.: I remember when a cow was milked at the Main Street, where you saw a stethoscope bright with variegated old underwear, stockings, etc., you knew that they were dyeing carpet rugs.

A peek at THE STARS

By LYN CONNELLY

THERE'S A LEGEND that Bing Crosby is a lazy guy. He's only himself in partly responsible for the legend, thanks to his gift for making off with his native schedule of radio, movies, records and the countless business enterprises in which he has an ear. But effectiveness and laziness are two different things, as anyone observing Crosby at work soon discovers. . . . For example, Bing's CBS radio show is sometimes cited as an example of his laziness because he tape-records it in advance. . . . In fact, he was the pioneer in recording a network radio show. . . . The table has grown in some quarters that Bing tapes his show eight or ten weeks ahead so he can spend a few months hunting, fishing or, perhaps, just lying in a hammock.

It has also been assumed by members of the Crosby family that Bing can sound up his regular musicians and cast, plus a staff of guest stars and do half a dozen of his radio shows at a single session. . . . This would be a very convenient arrangement, but for a number of reasons it just isn't done that way. . . . The fact is that Crosby's radio schedule is as demanding as any "live" show, and in a way even more so, since the matter of editing is involved. . . . Generally, Crosby records one show a week, staying roughly two weeks ahead of broadcast dates. His maestro, John Scott Trotter, can whip together just so many musical arrangements. . . . The tape-recording date isn't set when Bing happens to feel like it, either. . . . It has to be set days ahead so that calls can go out to the musicians and cast, guest stars can be engaged, a studio can be reserved and tickets printed for the studio audience. . . . When the day rolls around, Crosby puts in a full day, from about noon until 8:00 p.m., or thereabouts. The show is over when taped as far as the studio audience is concerned, but not for Crosby.

A NICKEL'S WORTH

By Selah Bond

MR. SUTTON pilled the groceries on the counter while the pretty young thing with bright red lipstick patted the keys and made the register whirr. Presently she tore off the tape and said, "That's five dollars and twenty-five cents."

Mr. Sutton handed her a ten dollar bill and she gave him a nickel in change. That was the beginning. When he took the coin and pressed it between his fingers, he realized it was the first time he had ever held a nickel. It felt like a prize, a reward. What good was it? What could it do for him?

He had never held a nickel before. He had always had money, but it was always in the form of a check or a bill. A nickel was something new, something different. It was a small, round, silver coin that felt like a puzzle in his hand.

He looked at the nickel and thought of the things he could do with it. He could buy a candy bar, or a pack of gum, or a small toy. He could give it to a child, or a beggar, or a stranger. He could keep it, or he could spend it. The possibilities were endless.

punctured the man's exuberance by pointing out that the nickel had fallen to the floor. "That's fifteen, not five," Mr. Sutton said.

"Oh yes, so it is," the manager admitted calmly. "But there must be something."

At the end of scouring powders between soap sippers and shoe polish, he found it: a half-empty box of balls of white rolled around cardboard cores.

"These," he said triumphantly, "are a nickel. I know we had them here once."

He led Mr. Sutton brotherly by the arm over to the cashier. "We had it," he advertised loudly. "Twelve for one nickel."

Her face expressed her naive difficulty for comprehension, yet she had a point to make when she said, "But, Mr. Sutton, that twelve was only yesterday. It's six cents or two for eleven."

Mr. Sutton struck with humility. "Impossible," he cried. "Maybe it's impossible. Mr. Sutton, she said, 'But you told me the price was six or two for eleven.'"

"Practically," Mr. Sutton said, "remember," the girl repeated, "because you told me right after you put up the sign."

The indicated a sign which stated the dramatic aphorism of all twentieth century businessmen: "We are fighting inflation."

"Remember, Mr. Sutton, because a customer laughed at the time. He thought it was a joke. I guess we are fighting it, aren't we, Mr. Sutton?" Her inquiry rang with a note of doubt.

Mr. Sutton stood there then five and a half feet tall but weighed more than a hundred and eighty pounds and his nasal position to the rim of his coat and there drew the sweat from his forehead.

"Well," he said with an exalted breath, "we certainly are. We are even taking it. As of now, I am lowering the price of this nickel to five cents, a five cent nickel. A nickel attached to a nickel is a nickel. And you, Mr. Sutton, you are the first to have the opportunity for as long as this nickel has been here."

SUCCESSFUL PARENTHOOD

IF YOUR CHILDREN are away at camp you may be wondering just what they are getting out of it, especially since writing letters home is not the thing young campers do best.

Recently we visited three camps, two public supported ones where there were boys and girls by the hundreds, and one private camp with an enrollment of less than one hundred. Accommodations were very much the same in all three camps, so we aren't going to report on food and lodging, nor on daily activities, which were also similar. For that matter, there were no important differences in the facilities, such as spirit and friendship, though it was easier to weigh them at the smaller camp. It is these difficult to assess values that we want to write about.

Most adults who went to summer camp when they were children will put friendship first as the most enduring asset of camp life. This doesn't necessarily mean that camp friendships have lasted throughout life. It is simply that in childhood we take our schoolmates and the kids next door somewhat for granted, but camp is a limited period. Here your child meets boys or girls from other states, or at least from other towns or different school districts within your own city. These children must pack into a few weeks the give and take which is stretched over a year with their home playmates. Suddenly friendship becomes a recognized ideal, something prized, something to work for. Even the shy child finds he can make friends at camp and he becomes a little more of a person in his own eyes.

It isn't just this awakening sense of friendship with children his own age that is so valuable. It is the experience of having boys and girls older than himself pay attention to him. A seven-year-old could live in a neighborhood surrounded by fourteen-year-olds and never get more notice from them than a "Hi, ya!" But at camp, older boys, especially the junior counselors in their early teens, are encouraged to befriend the smaller boys. They pass on skills at games by teaching the little fellows the fine points, they take sides in competition so that young Johnny has an admired ten-ager rooting for him in swimming and riding contests.

Next to friendship is the lesson in group loyalty which all camps supply. A reverence for religion and for the flag are among the greater loyalties dramatized at camp. These are the elements of camp life your child won't be able to tell you about, because he can't yet put them into words. If you want more concrete evidence of what camp gives your child, ask him about the fun, the excitement of discovering things he can do well, and about the wonderful hours of sleep that come at the end of a day outdoors.

The LOW DOWN FROM HICKORY GROVE

I barge in on any subject and the question for asking today, is—"If the USA is even to be licked who will do same?" And from my research it will not be the Soviet that will administer a haymaker—not anyway, if we finally leave overboard our suckerish mode of dealing with the other lands of the earth and also leave overboard the crumbly of our own citizens via eliminating any good reason for their practice of theft or for exercising any initiative.

We been warn to a frizzle by Govt experiments and security arrangements. And under cover of all the wigg complicated promises and exhibiting the really undermining work of reducing our USA to the ranks goes on, like the dark

A PICK OF THE STARS

By LYN CONNELLY

THERE'S A PROGRAM on the air called "Welcome Travelers" . . . It's been on for quite a spell, presumably because visitors to Chicago find it refreshing for a between-trains interval. It's obviously better than sitting around a musty depot waiting for a connection—and besides, there are prizes to be won on the program, a gimmick always welcomed by the average citizen . . .

The fellow was at a loss as to how to treat a member of the great press . . . A half-hour was spent in a small, hot and dusty den filled with newspapers from all over the country which have used pictures of Tompkins on the program, supplied by the energetic Mr. Lear . . . This was supposed to be a "different angle" on the show . . . After a five minute spiel on the wonders of Tompkins (by Bartlett's press agent, match), the interview was brought to a whitewashed finish.

When a project was broached about the treatment accorded the rural press, the Lear was ready with perceptive aplomb, promising with a promise to have an over-see to state of affairs.

That was a year ago and we're still waiting.

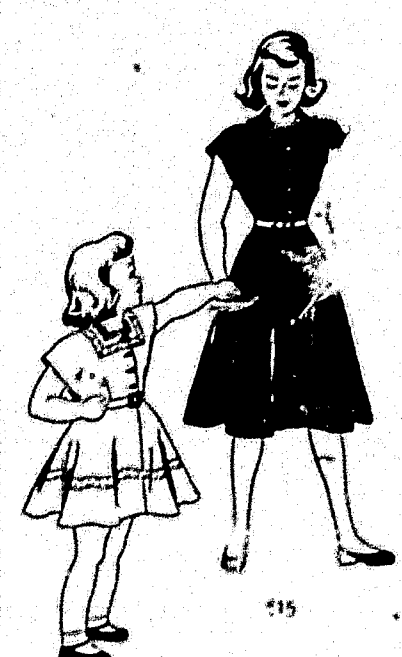

It is very seldom that a columnist gets to do a show for a story but because "Welcome Travelers" seemed to be one of the more popular shows to areas outside Chicago we thought it would be pleasant to do a little interview so folks could get an idea of what makes the show tick . . . Well, the report turned out to be a bit different . . . First of all, while the program may "welcome travelers" it is obvious that it does not welcome the press . . . certainly not the rural press . . . The fact that readers of this column might want to read something about the program did not make the least impression.

REV. ROBERT H. HARPER

The Christian's Use of Money and

Lesson for August 12: Matthew 23: 13-15, 19-20

Memory Selection: Matthew 7:12

IN THE PARABLE of the talents, Jesus tells of the householder who delivered his goods to certain stewards and took his journey into a far country.

The man who received five talents made five talents more; likewise the man who had received two talents made other two. But the man who was given one talent hid it in the earth and brought it to his lord when he returned from the far country. The plain teaching is that to every man are entrusted certain things which he is required to develop and use to the best of his ability in the service of God and his fellow men. When certain things are entrusted to a man, certain things commensurate with the gift are expected and required.

He who hid his lord's money was not condemned because he had only one talent but because he did not develop and use what he had. And, woe to the man who received five talents and the man who had received two grew in their ability to serve, the man of one talent lost all ability and opportunity to serve as the one talent was taken from him and given to another.

God commits unto us all that we have and are, to be developed and used for him. Life is a stewardship. Let us strive to be good stewards of our money, our talents, and our time because we are good stewards of ourselves, of the lives God has given us.

PROMINENT SPEAKERS ON

THREE-QUARTER CENTURY CLUB PROGRAM, AUG. 22

Several State, County and local dignitaries will be among the speakers at the annual meeting of the Maine Three-Quarter Century Club at Colby College's new Mayflower Hill campus on Aug. 22. Guy P. Butler, executive manager of the Maine Publicity Bureau, announced today.

The Rev. Nelson Miles Helkes of Albion, chaplain of the organization, will pronounce the invocation as the program gets underway at 10:20 A. M. A message of welcome will be given by Mayor Russell M. Squire of Waterville, followed by greetings from Harold F. Schurle, president of the Maine Publicity Bureau, which sponsors the organization of Maine's elderly citizens; and John L. Parker of Bangor, vice president of the Three-Quarter Century Club.

After lunch, principal speakers will be Kennebec County Probate Judge Francis H. Bates of Augusta and State Senator Robert N. Haskell of Bangor. The chorus from the New England Music Camp at Oakland will present a half-hour concert, which will be followed by games and contests among the older themselves. Butler will be master of ceremonies for the day's program, which will conclude around 4 P. M.

Members and guests will bring box lunches. Free coffee will be supplied by the Waterville Lions Club, which will be host for this year's outing. Other Lions Clubs throughout the State will assist in the State-wide transportation problem. The new Mayflower Hill campus will be open to the visitors and the
